The same article on Grover mentioned that people in a threesome typically don't want the role of the ugly one. People want to be both attractive and non-threatening. You can throw money at the problem but you can't make it go away. It's just a fact of life. Amanda wrote: And then your husband is still attractive, but you can't be with him. You don't care if he's in bed with someone else or not, but you care if you're in bed with someone else or not. When did you get married? There is no logical reason for having a "terrible" relationship with your husband. He's not going to leave you for a younger woman, you have no kids, and you are a strong, successful person. You are the winner, not him. I actually find it hard to find a definition of "terrible" relationship. Any couples that are happy and treat their partners well are not a "terrible" relationship, and any couples that treat their partners badly are also not a "terrible" relationship. I'm not sure what the criteria would be for labeling a relationship a "terrible" relationship. I would argue that there is no such thing as a "great" relationship, only great for you at the time. Why do we even bother with the whole "in a "terrible" relationship" concept? Cherish your children, accept and love your husband. You are loved and needed. If he loves you that way too, there is no reason for you not to be in the relationship. Why would you want to leave your children for a stranger when you love them so much? You said that you don't think that you have any good reasons to leave. I disagree. If your husband doesn't love you, there is a good reason to leave. If he loves you and you love 82157476af
